Do we need another reason to distrust the phony Christianity of the religious right?

I have many times critiqued the homosexual agenda and the unnaturalness of homosexuality. That being said, I only talk about it when it is relevant and have said many times, I don't harbor animus towards such people. I would like their lifestyles to be relegated to the dark regions of society so we don't have to think or hear about it. But I would not be opposed to having a friend who also happened to be gay anymore than I would be opposed to having friends who aren't White. Would I seek such people out? No. But I don't fear their cooties or something.

Some on the religious right have made this a weird obsession, which becomes all the weirder when they come out of the closet are exposed as self-hating faggots. If you do have these such attractions, you need to accept them and move on. Suppressing feelings you can't control is not healthy, even if acting on them would be immoral. Enter, Jesse Lee Peterson. He's a black Christian pastor who has debated antifa and the alt-right. He is a republican and has said some pretty interesting things, like that blacks were better under Jim Crow than with civil rights. I'd agree that paternalistic White supremacy was beneficial to blacks compared with their native lifestyles back home.

Peterson has been caught liking a gay porn video on twitter. He immediately locked his account when called out. Screenshots are available below and he was one of those conservatives who would meet the classic definition of homophobia: brazen lashing out at gay people. While the sentiment is ultimately correct, it turns out that sort of attitude is often covering up something else. In short, Pastor Peterson is a fraud, he preaches one thing and does another and in public no less. He needs to leave the public sphere forever and get his life in order.
